HOUSTON, TX (May 18, 2017)— Annabeth Rosen: Fired, Broken, Gathered, Heaped is the artist's first major survey and covers over twenty years of her work. The exhibition will also feature works on paper that mirror the trajectory of Rosen's sculptural work.

For over two decades, Annabeth Rosen has interrogated the place of ceramics in the contemporary art landscape. Formally trained in ceramics yet heavily influenced by painting, Rosen has expanded her practice into conceptually-driven sculptural forms. While Rosen's earlier works engaged first with traditional ceramic forms conjuring landscape and nature, her more recent works push past the physical realm and into intangible states of being.

Exploring the temporal nature of ceramics, Rosen melds the performative into both material and process. Composing through laborious, additive techniques, she pushes the medium beyond spectacle and into conversations about endurance-based performance, feminist thought, contemporary painting, and conceptual art. The artist rarely attempts to obscure her hand as a primary instrument and often “binds” multitudes of discrete works to create multifarious objects, sometimes diminutive and occasionally monumental.

Rosen sees both her studio and the kiln as spaces of invention. She embraces process and chance as essential elements in the formation of her art objects. Rosen has said of her work, “I break almost as much ceramics as I make, and I think I learn as much about the work by doing so. By being so focused on a destination for the piece, I overlook shapes and ideas. Much of the work is made with already fired parts broken, reassembled, reglazed, and re-fired with the addition of wet clay elements if necessary. I work with a hammer and chisel, and I think of the fired pieces as being as fluid and malleable as wet clay.”

Celebrated as an artist’s artist, Rosen is a pioneer in contemporary ceramics, bringing fluidity to the genre and its discourse with contemporary art. Within the genre’s trajectory, Rosen functions as an important link between such artists as Peter Voulkos, Jun Kaneko, Mary Heilmann, Lynda Benglis, and a new generation of artists working in the medium.
