The installation consists of photographs from a body of work dedicated to the toad that lives outside the artist’s apartment in Austin, Texas. At CAMH these works are presented outdoors in a way that approximates museum signage but stops short of providing any plainly-informative function. They are puzzle pieces, full of shifty urban animals that indicate the boundaries of an “any-place” where we all might spend vast amounts of our conscious lives—whether or not we are paying attention. CAMH Director Bill Arning encountered Miller’s work when jurying a prize show for the Umlauf Sculpture Garden & Museum in Austin, Texas and he was startled to see a photographer apply for an outdoor sculpture venue. On inviting Miller to participate in the Art on the Lawn series, Arning stated, "Seeing Miller's wild inventiveness in spatializing photos, I realized Houston needed him on CAMH's front lawn."

About Art on the Lawn

Reflecting contemporary art's expansive scope, CAMH's ongoing series Art Outside the Box encourages our visitors to consider art that does not necessarily exist on vast white walls inside a museum. Art can exist in performances that activate the museum space in unique ways, in non-traditional art galleries such as the front lawn of the Museum, and in collaborations and initiatives that expand the Museum's reach beyond our physical space to bring contemporary art and discussion into the community.

In the spirit of Art Outside the Box, CAMH launched its Art on the Lawn series on the Museum's Eleanor and Frank Freed Garden in 2011. Art on the Lawn activates CAMH's exterior space, turning the lawn facing Montrose into a third gallery and provides a venue for contemporary artists to showcase their work. The series offers visitors a tangible and interactive way to experience art, providing photo opportunities (often posted to CAMH's social media sites and shared with nearly 100,000 followers worldwide) and encouraging a social atmosphere on CAMH's lawn for picnics and lounging. The Houston Museum District is an important tourist destination and the CAMH Art on the Lawn series enhances the look of the corridor between the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston; The Glassell School; and CAMH.
