Over the last three decades, Mary Weatherford has increasingly become recognized as one of the leading painters of her generation, as well as one of the most astute and daring practitioners taking on the legacies of American abstraction. As she explores and expands the medium's possibilities, she honors its history by seizing opportunities to break with tradition at every turn. Her notable incorporation of sculptural elements—including the neon tubes that have been a constant presence in her work over the last five years—as well as her fearless and physically-embodied approach to painterly gesture, have allowed her to envision abstraction as both a formal language and a poetic, highly personal mode of engagement with the world outside the studio.

Through markedly fascinating bodies of work, Weatherford has continued to explore the ways in which people, as unique sentient beings, navigate their surroundings both naturally and culturally. She is intensely interested in the way individuals situate themselves and make peace with their given external realities—aesthetic, societal, familial, and psychological. In tandem with her seemingly disparate material mash-ups, Weatherford is constantly searching for nontraditional sources of inspiration as well. Examples of such divergent sources include Greek seafood restaurant murals and liquor store neons the artist encountered while driving at dusk in Bakersfield, California.

Widely read, and born with a philosophical bent, Mary Weatherford is in many ways the quintessential third-wave feminist painter, whose activist urges are hybridized with an absurdist take on history.
