HOUSTON, TX (January 4, 2016)—The Contemporary Arts Museum Houston’s Teen Council is pleased to present Origins of the Self, a group exhibition featuring work by Houston-area teen artists. Focusing on themes surrounding personal identity, the exhibition presents 86 artworks by 63 teens in a variety of media including photography, painting, video, and sculpture. Origins of the Self is the 10th biennial youth art exhibition organized by CAMH’s Teen Council.

Every other year, CAMH’s Teen Council organizes an exhibition in the Zilkha Gallery featuring new work by young, Houston-area artists. The Teen Council members work collaboratively to select the theme, title, and artworks featured in the exhibition while assisting with the design, installation, printed exhibition catalogue, and related programming. Drawing from an open call, the Teen Council received almost 400 submissions responding to the questions: What is the real you? Where is the real you? How do you define the real you in a constantly changing landscape?

“Coming of age is often represented as a solitary process, but our environments construct the self and often create a disconnect between the self we present and our true self. The goal of this exhibition is to recognize these contradictions and facilitate a reconciliation of these binaries: to create a space that embraces gray areas,” says Ife Omidiran, CAMH Teen Council Member.

Living in a world overwhelmed by social media, teens are navigating how to represent themselves while trying to locate genuine connections and understand their peers through digital profiles, likes, and comments. In search of how to define themselves—whether that is online, in school, or at home—the young artists in this exhibition explore their response to societal expectations. The artists also recognize that adolescence is a time to explore, search, and learn about how they choose to define themselves independently of their family and friends.

“Throughout the selection process, the Teen Council members listened to each other, spoke diplomatically, and were true collaborators. The submissions informed the theme in surprising ways and helped the Teen Council settle on the title for the show. These young artists have reminded us that above all exploration leads to discovery,” says Michael Simmonds, Teen Council and Public Programs Coordinator at CAMH.

Selected works include: Lost in Translation, a mixed media portrait by Andy Liu that shows an incomplete drawing of a young woman layered over a background of encyclopedia entries and sheet music. Areas of the portrait allow the background to show through, asking questions about influence, technology, and how we find information in a fast-changing world. Briana Hernandez’s Broken Up fragments an image of a teenager facing the audience with a solemn expression. The physical fragmentation reflects the conflicts that teenagers face as they attempt to find and define their identity. While many of the works in the exhibition play with the idea of portraiture, other pieces veer from the human face to explore ways that we identify ourselves, including Claudia Garcia-Quinones’s wall-mounted sculpture Nucleus, composed of delicately-sewn felt legs radiating from a center point and moving in different directions. This piece evokes a feeling of chaos and confusion, possibly revealing that these sentiments are at the heart of adolescence.

Origins of the Self is on view from January 28–May 7, 2017. The exhibition is organized by CAMH’s Teen Council under the guidance of Michael Simmonds, Teen Council and Public Programs Coordinator. The Teen Council has organized a variety of complementary programming to accompany the exhibition, including a Poetry Slam and a Music Fest, in addition to leading art-making workshops at a Family Day and Open Studio events in March and April respectively.
